However, both maintain that the percentage of good racing pigeons can be increased substantially by breeding only with birds with the eye sign common to good breeders. Nevertheless, both fanciers also emphasize different aspects of the eye sign concept which does not make one right or wrong. One could look at the same eye, as I have done here, and see the attributes emphasized by various eye sign enthusiasts.

A number of ambitious beginners in the pigeon sport have asked what to look for in the eye of a racing pigeon. The information here is based on my own experience and, in my view, is backed by results. Beware of the “eye sign” experts. This warning will save you cash and the heads of many good pigeons. Firstly, if a so-called “eye sign” expert examines your pigeons’ eyes and tells you which to cull, politely guide him off your property.

This is a quote from Silvere Toye when I asked him about eye sign in racing pigeons. “ The pigeon’s eye is a reflection of the health also the vitality of the pigeon the older they get” Quite right but there is still a lot more to the subject. There are some fascinating photos of pigeon’s eye’s and they look incredible, but they are not worth a light, they are very misleading because they are manufactured.
